The Long Island Regional Envirothon is a environmental studies competition event for Nassau and Suffolk County high school students. Teams compete to expand their knowledge on environmental topics and issues, with the chance to win scholarship funds. Students also have the unique opportunity to interact with professionals, who volunteer for the event, from an array of local public and private sector environmental agencies.

It focuses on five subject areas: aquatics, forestry, soils, wildlife, and the current issue—which change annually. This year's topic is: Waste to Resources.

Stay tuned for registration details! For more information, please contact the Nassau or Suffolk County Soil and Water Conservation District (SWCD), and/or visit our website for the latest updates:
